Essay Planning

Planning and outlining the entire essay are another important step. The professor will know if you have planned out the essay before writing or not. The question that arises here is how? It will be clarified in the way you have structured and presented your ideas. Generally, the introduction should contain a brief historical background of the topic. Moreover, the thesis statement will be discussed at the end of the introductory paragraph. It will explain the central argument of your essay in a single sentence.

On the other hand, the body paragraphs must have the description and the explanation of the main ideas. Each paragraph must start with a topic sentence and should comprise of a single idea. Lastly, the concluding paragraph will close the essay without adding any new ideas. It should summarize the entire essay by restating the thesis statement. For a strong essay, try to present the ideas in a consistent and logical flow. An explained summary can shift and depend on an essay writer free with your writing piece.

Credible and Relevant Sources

Most of the time, professors mention the number of sources that you need to quote in your essay. However, they must be from credible and widely recognized scholarly journals and papers. Similarly, adding sources will also show that you have conducted thorough research and worked hard on your writing piece. Nevertheless, do not forget to cite the sources. It will show their authenticity and reliability.

Personal Thoughts and Explanation

Using credible sources is not enough. Instead, you should use them to support your claims. Some students try to impress the teachers by filling their essays with quotations. Furthermore, they often try to plan their essays around these quotes, which is a wrong and inappropriate thing to do. Remember, your teacher wants to read your personal thoughts and opinions about the topic. Moreover, you will be graded on the basis of how well you have presented and defended those thoughts.

Perfect Grammar and Zero Plagiarism
