Assuming you're an esa letter in arkansas owner, it's critical to keep your shaggy companion sound and very much prepped. One part of pet consideration that ought not be ignored is nail managing. Managing your ESA's nails can appear to be an overwhelming errand, yet with the right direction, it tends to be done securely and really.

I am going to provide you with a guide that will make clipping the nails of your dog an easy task to handle.

Just follow these steps and your dog will have short nails in no time.

Step #1: Restrain the Dog

This might as well be the most difficult step to accomplish.

You need to make sure that your dog is in a good mood before attempting to cut his poor nails. Even the best dogs are likely to be agitated with nail cutting. Once you are sure that he is happy, try to relax the dog into a lying position or a sideways pose.

Place your own weight on top of the doggo so that he won't move too much.

If you are having trouble then get yourself a helper to get the work done quickly.

Step #2: Get the Best Clipper

There are two types of clippers for dogs: the scissors type and the guillotine type. The guillotine type dog nail clippers are the best as they are far easier to use, especially on those hard black colored nails.

These clippers have a round hole in which the nail of the dog is placed.

The clippers are then closed and the nail is cut clean easily enough.

Step #3: Start with the Dew Nails

Most of the time, people tend to forget that dogs have nails on the inner side of their paws. These nails are called dew nails and they are forgotten during nail clipping.

So, it is best to start off by cutting the dew nails.

They are also the most tricky ones as they are closest to the skin. So, if you are doing this for the first time then be very, very careful with these in particular.

Step #4: Don't Clip Too Much

Just like humans, dog nails are connected to their skin, and clipping these nails too much can hurt their skin.

So, if you place the clipper far too close to the paw then it is most likely that your poor puppy will end up getting hurt. Since we do NOT want that to happen, I suggest that you make sure to not clip the nails too short.

Have a good look at the length of the nail beforehand.

Step #5: Use Small Cuts

The best way to do a good clipping is to do it in small cuts, especially if you have a large dog, as they may struggle. Even the best apartment dogs have the worst kind of nails and your ESA will be no exception. The black nails of a dog are seriously hard and are not easily clipped.

So, applying pressure to cut them will hurt your dog.

Here you can try to cut the nail slowly by clipping at it. Cut a small portion first and then increase the size of the next portion.

This is mostly done when your dog has very big nails.

Step #6: Final Treatment

If, by mistake, you manage to cut the nails too short then do not worry.

Just calm your dog and apply a styptic pencil to the nail. This contains silver nitrate which will stop any blood that might flow from the wound.

Your dog will object to this so you will have to restrain him again.

Once that is done, hold the black end of the pencil to the wounded area and rotate it until the bleeding stops altogether.

There it is!

Also, if you are thinking it is about time to make your dog an ESA then search online. You can get an ESA letter easily enough while you sit at home. Just be careful of scam sites and find an authentic one to get you in touch with a medical professional.
